

The Matthew Berry AI Experience

A conversational fantasy football assistant that thinks, sounds, and advises like Matthew Berry — available to every fan, 24/7.

What this is

Fans get a dedicated number they can text — and on the other end is Matthew Berry. Not a generic chatbot, not a search engine. An AI that carries his rankings, his Love/Hate leans, his start/sit logic, and his voice, available to his entire audience at once.

It answers the questions Matthew gets thousands of times a week — “Start Puka or DJ Moore?”, “Where do you have Bijan?”, “Anyone worth a waiver claim at TE?” — instantly, in his style, around the clock. It's his expertise, scaled to every fan who wants it.

This isn't a concept. We already run this exact system in production today for comedian Zarna Garg, whose 10,000 subscribers text her AI daily. The technology is live, proven, and battle-tested — we'd be bringing Matthew onto a platform that already works, not building from scratch.

Why this matters for Matthew

A bot is the means, not the point. Here's what it actually does for him:

- Deepens fan loyalty. Every fan gets a direct, personal line to “Matthew” — the kind of access that turns casual followers into superfans who stick around all season.
  - An always-on touchpoint. He can only do so many podcasts, columns, and replies. This is his presence with his audience 24/7, even in the off-season, without adding to his workload.
  - A genuine differentiator. No other analyst offers their fans a personal AI advisor in their own voice. It's a first-of-its-kind product that sets him apart from everyone else in the space.
  - A new monetization surface. It opens flexible revenue paths — a premium subscriber tier, a sponsor-friendly experience, or a perk bundled into existing offerings. (We'll tailor the model to whatever fits his business; no pressure to decide up front.)
  - It scales infinitely. Whether 1,000 or 1,000,000 fans text in at kickoff on Sunday, every one gets an instant, personal answer. His reach stops being capped by his time.

1. The Intelligence

It's built on his knowledge — and only his

The assistant doesn't make things up and it doesn't speak for anyone else. It is trained exclusively on Matthew's own material: his rankings, his columns, his Love/Hate analysis, his podcast, and whatever else he wants it to know. Every answer reflects his take, in his voice.

He decides what goes in

This is his brain — he controls it. Matthew (or his team) chooses exactly what knowledge the assistant draws from:

- His positional and overall rankings
- His weekly columns and Love/Hate pieces
- His podcast and show content
- His draft guides, dynasty rankings, and player notes
- Anything he wants to add — or hold back

If there's a take he doesn't want the bot to give, it won't. If there's content he wants front and center, it will lead with it. He's in the driver's seat at all times.

It stays current — auto-updated three times a week

Fantasy football moves fast. Rankings shift, players get hurt, narratives change by the day. A stale assistant is worthless during the season.

So the intelligence refreshes automatically, three times a week. As Matthew publishes new rankings and analysis, the assistant absorbs it — no manual work on his end. By game day, it reflects his latest thinking, not last week's. Fans always get his current call, and the assistant can even tell them when a take was last updated.

The result: an assistant that knows everything Matthew knows, says only what Matthew would say, and is never out of date.

2. What Fans Can Do With It

This isn't a menu of buttons. It's an open conversation — fans text it like they'd text a friend who happens to be the best fantasy mind in the business. A few of the things they'll do constantly:

- Start/sit decisions — "Who do I start this week, X or Y?" The single most-asked fantasy question, answered in seconds, in Matthew's voice.
- Rankings on demand — "Where do you have [player]?" | "Give me your top 5 RBs right now."
- Waiver wire help — "Anyone worth grabbing this week?"
- Draft prep — "I'm picking 7th in a PPR league — who's my guy?"
- React to the news — "Did you see the [player] news? Does that change your ranking?"
- Love/Hate, on tap — "Who are you loving this week?" — his signature format, now a back-and-forth.
- Just talk ball — banter, hot takes, and trash talk in his voice.

And because it's a real conversation, it remembers each fan — their team, their league type, the players they keep asking about — so the advice gets sharper the more they use it. Every fan feels like they have Matthew in their corner all season long.

3. Built for His Brand — Control & Safety

The assistant carries Matthew's name, so protecting it is our first priority. This is built to make him look great, never to surprise him.

- It stays in its lane. The assistant talks fantasy football in his voice. It won't wander into off-brand or sensitive topics, and it won't invent opinions he never gave — if it doesn't have his take, it says so rather than guessing.
- He sets the boundaries. Any subjects, players, or takes he wants off-limits, we lock down. His team can review and adjust how it sounds at any time.
- Appropriate guardrails. Responsible language around anything gambling-adjacent, and clear "this is advice, not a guarantee" framing — the same standards he already holds himself to.
- Nothing goes live unseen. We tune and test the voice with his team until everyone's confident it sounds like him, before a single fan ever talks to it.

The bar is simple: every fan walks away feeling like they just got the real Matthew Berry — and Matthew never has to worry about what it said.

4. Insights Back to You

Because every fan conversation flows through one place, Matthew gets a window into his audience he's never had before — fully anonymized and aggregated:

- What fans are asking about — the players, matchups, and questions trending across his audience in real time.
- Content gold. Those trends are a ready-made list of what to cover next on the podcast or in his columns — his fans are literally telling him what they want.
- Audience pulse. A sense of sentiment and interest as the season unfolds, straight from the people who follow him most closely.

It's not just a service to his fans — it's a research tool that makes the rest of his content sharper.

5. What We Handle

This is fully managed. Matthew brings the expertise; we build, run, and maintain everything else. He never touches a line of code or a piece of infrastructure.

Creation

We build the entire experience end to end — designing his assistant, loading his knowledge, dialing in his voice and personality until it genuinely sounds like him, and testing it thoroughly before a single fan talks to it.

Phone Number

We provide and set up the dedicated number fans text, fully configured and compliant with messaging regulations (opt-in, opt-out, the works). Nothing for him to procure or manage.

Maintenance

We keep the lights on — the three-times-a-week knowledge refresh, all the infrastructure, uptime, and the ongoing tuning that keeps the assistant sharp as the season evolves. It just works, every day.

Live Support

We monitor the experience and stand behind it. If something needs attention, we're on it — and we work with his team to keep the assistant aligned with how Matthew wants to show up to his fans.

In short

Matthew brings his brain. We turn it into an assistant that every fan can talk to — always in his voice, always up to date, and fully run by us.

A premier fantasy mind, on call for every fan, every Sunday morning.
